Insights from live polling at the May 30 event

Leadership Forum

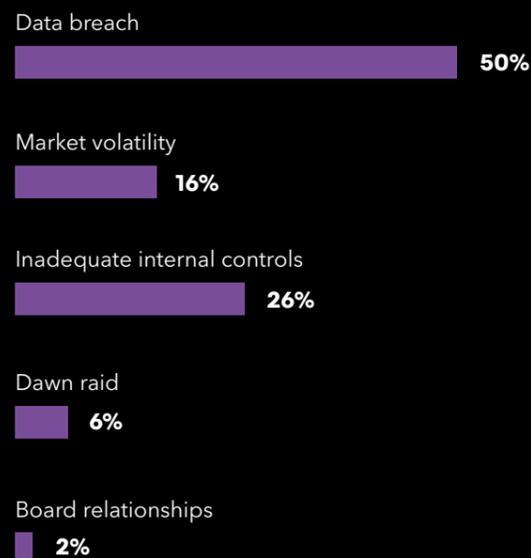

New York 2019

Most legal industry leaders have still not systematized their approach to corporate transactions, particularly due to a volatile regulatory and economic environment.

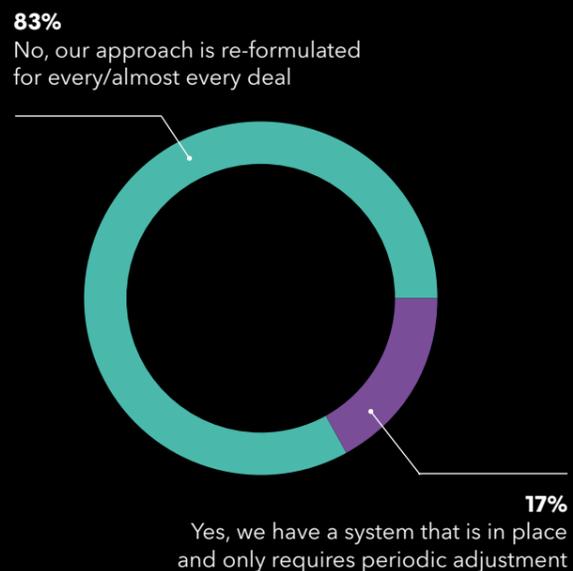

On May 30, 2019, Bloomberg Law convened the Leadership Forum - New York, sponsored by Ankura, Epiq, Fulcrum GT, and Mindcrest, where regulators, in-house counsel, and law firm partners shared insights on the impact of the regulatory landscape and technological disruption on corporate transactions.

The day long Forum, now in its 5th year, convened over 200 attendees who were invited to provide their opinions on the impact of regulations on their process and strategy. 72 senior leaders from corporate legal departments and law firms participated in the polling. Here are the results.

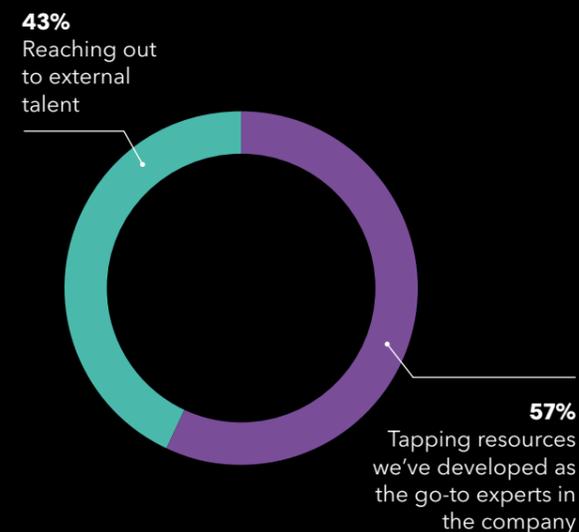

In general and when thinking the changing business environment, what keeps you up at night?

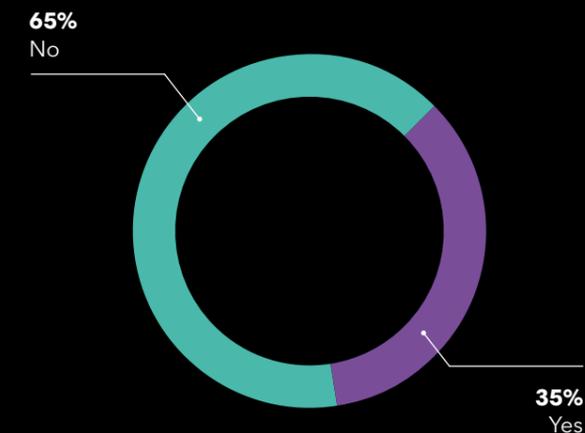

Have you been able to systematize antitrust compliance and risk mitigation processes, or is the environment too volatile?

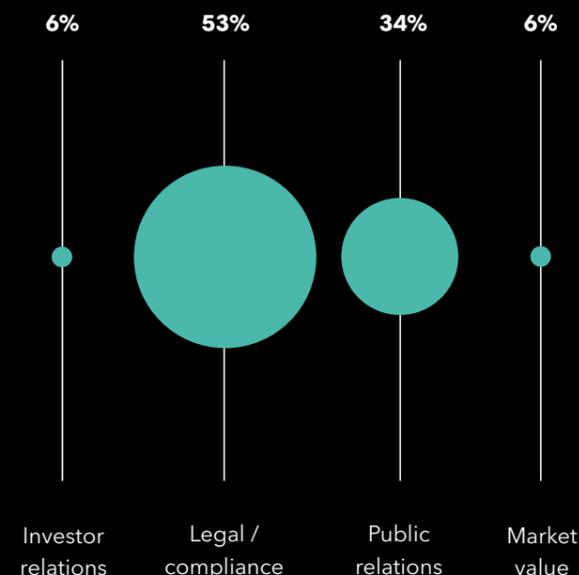

Are you promoting from within to staff your deal teams or building them primarily from outside?

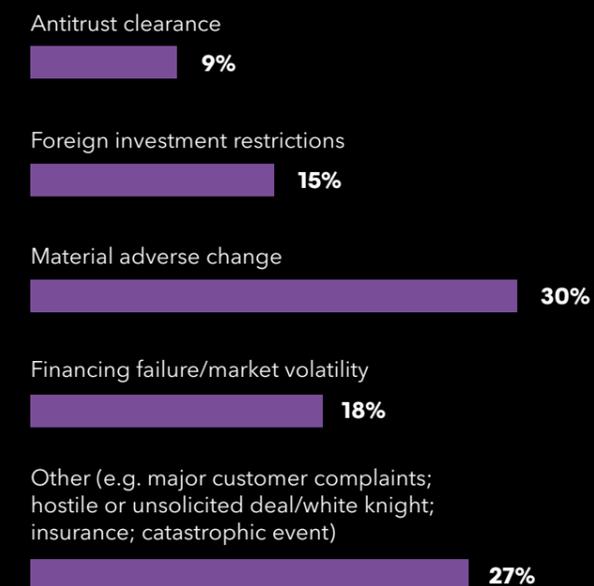

Have you, as a buyer or seller, undertaken identification and valuation of data sets of the target company as a separate asset?

Assuming the almost 100% likelihood of a data breach, is it primarily an issue of:

Which of these five possibilities is the most risky in terms of deal failure?
